Welcome to the fall edition of The Arclight online.

Hub Highlights

Welcome to the fall edition of The Arclight online.

The Arclight Online

SPRING/SUMMER 2019

The Arc

Enjoy!

Matthew's Perspective

The Successful Learning Center is hosted by Dominican College, Blauvelt; Mount Saint Mary’s; Bergen Community College; and the New Jersey School for the Blind and Visually Impaired.

Ms. Placanica.

The point of such an exercise is to teach critical thinking—to stretch what they know, make them think, make them question, zero in on the issues. And finally, with their new critical thinking skills, they know how to apply. The arc of the exercise is to take the student out of the world they are familiar with and into a world they are not familiar with. And when they come back, they have to apply their old world knowledge to a new world knowledge. That is a critical thinking skill. In this case, students are learning about how the economy impacts the way people live. The point of such an exercise is to teach critical thinking—to stretch what they know, make them think, make them question, zero in on the issues. And finally, with their new critical thinking skills, they know how to apply. The arc of the exercise is to take the student out of the world they are familiar with and into a world they are not familiar with. And when they come back, they have to apply their old world knowledge to a new world knowledge. That is a critical thinking skill. In this case, students are learning about how the economy impacts the way people live.

The Successful Learning Center is hosted by Dominican College, Blauvelt; Mount Saint Mary’s; Bergen Community College; and the New Jersey School for the Blind and Visually Impaired.

Ms. Placanica.

The point of such an exercise is to teach critical thinking—to stretch what they know, make them think, make them question, zero in on the issues. And finally, with their new critical thinking skills, they know how to apply. The arc of the exercise is to take the student out of the world they are familiar with and into a world they are not familiar with. And when they come back, they have to apply their old world knowledge to a new world knowledge. That is a critical thinking skill. In this case, students are learning about how the economy impacts the way people live. The point of such an exercise is to teach critical thinking—to stretch what they know, make them think, make them question, zero in on the issues. And finally, with their new critical thinking skills, they know how to apply. The arc of the exercise is to take the student out of the world they are familiar with and into a world they are not familiar with. And when they come back, they have to apply their old world knowledge to a new world knowledge. That is a critical thinking skill. In this case, students are learning about how the economy impacts the way people live.

The Successful Learning Center is hosted by Dominican College, Blauvelt; Mount Saint Mary’s; Bergen Community College; and the New Jersey School for the Blind and Visually Impaired.

Ms. Placanica.

The point of such an exercise is to teach critical thinking—to stretch what they know, make them think, make them question, zero in on the issues. And finally, with their new critical thinking skills, they know how to apply. The arc of the exercise is to take the student out of the world they are familiar with and into a world they are not familiar with. And when they come back, they have to apply their old world knowledge to a new world knowledge. That is a critical thinking skill. In this case, students are learning about how the economy impacts the way people live. The point of such an exercise is to teach critical thinking—to stretch what they know, make them think, make them question, zero in on the issues. And finally, with their new critical thinking skills, they know how to apply. The arc of the exercise is to take the student out of the world they are familiar with and into a world they are not familiar with. And when they come back, they have to apply their old world knowledge to a new world knowledge. That is a critical thinking skill. In this case, students are learning about how the economy impacts the way people live.

The Successful Learning Center is hosted by Dominican College, Blauvelt; Mount Saint Mary’s; Bergen Community College; and the New Jersey School for the Blind and Visually Impaired.

Ms. Placanica.

The point of such an exercise is to teach critical thinking—to stretch what they know, make them think, make them question, zero in on the issues. And finally, with their new critical thinking skills, they know how to apply. The arc of the exercise is to take the student out of the world they are familiar with and into a world they are not familiar with. And when they come back, they have to apply their old world knowledge to a new world knowledge. That is a critical thinking skill. In this case, students are learning about how the economy impacts the way people live. The point of such an exercise is to teach critical thinking—to stretch what they know, make them think, make them question, zero in on the issues. And finally, with their new critical thinking skills, they know how to apply. The arc of the exercise is to take the student out of the world they are familiar with and into a world they are not familiar with. And when they come back, they have to apply their old world knowledge to a new world knowledge. That is a critical thinking skill. In this case, students are learning about how the economy impacts the way people live.

The Successful Learning Center is hosted by Dominican College, Blauvelt; Mount Saint Mary’s; Bergen Community College; and the New Jersey School for the Blind and Visually Impaired.

Ms. Placanica.

The point of such an exercise is to teach critical thinking—to stretch what they know, make them think, make them question, zero in on the issues. And finally, with their new critical thinking skills, they know how to apply. The arc of the exercise is to take the student out of the world they are familiar with and into a world they are not familiar with. And when they come back, they have to apply their old world knowledge to a new world knowledge. That is a critical thinking skill. In this case, students are learning about how the economy impacts the way people live. The point of such an exercise is to teach critical thinking—to stretch what they know, make them think, make them question, zero in on the issues. And finally, with their new critical thinking skills, they know how to apply. The arc of the exercise is to take the student out of the world they are familiar with and into a world they are not familiar with. And when they come back, they have to apply their old world knowledge to a new world knowledge. That is a critical thinking skill. In this case, students are learning about how the economy impacts the way people live.